Macquarie Professional Series

Monthly report – 30 November 2022

Performance summary

- The Fund returned 3.76%, net of fees, in November 2022, compared with a return for the Benchmark of 2.02%, with markets maintaining their positive trajectory despite ongoing inflation and interest rate uncertainty.
- Cyclical sectors, led by Materials, Industrials and Financials, drove the index higher in November. For the Fund, the largest relative sector contributors were holdings in Consumer Discretionary, such as Richemont and eBay, and in Communication Services, such as News Corporation and Fox. Relative detractors included holdings in Materials, namely Corteva, and an underweight to Industrials.
- Richemont was among the top individual contributors to performance in November. The company released strong half year results, with underlying sales growing by 16% driven by the company's high margin jewellery brands, Cartier and Van Cleef & Arpels. This revenue growth was well balanced geographically, with US and European revenue growth more than offsetting China, which remains affected by lockdowns. Franchise Partners continues to believe that Richemont is well placed in the attractive luxury jewellery segment. Cartier and Van Cleef & Arpels are among the strongest brands in the segment and have substantial pricing power.
- Salesforce was among the top individual detractors from performance in November. Shares in the company were likely affected by broader macroeconomic concerns that are starting to impact other leading software companies. Broker surveys conducted in November also showed signs of weakness in software customer demand. The company further announced the surprise departure of co-CEO Bret Taylor. However, founder and fellow co-CEO Marc Benioff has navigated multiple executive transitions over the past two decades. Management has demonstrated strong cost discipline which led to margin expansion in the quarter.
- There were no initial purchases or final sales within the portfolio during the month.
