Market and portfolio review

During the September quarter, Karara was replaced by Acadian as the manager of the portfolio. Acadian generated very strong performance over the quarter from stock and industry sector selection relative to the S&P/ASX Small Ords index. Good stock selection in Banks, Consumer Discretionary, Energy, Industrials, IT, Metals and Mining, while a large overweight in the Energy sector was the main contributor to sector outperformance. Stock selection in Gold detracted performance. Some of the larger stock contributors included overweights in New Hope and NIB and underweight Brainchip, Magellin and Megaport.

Future investment strategy

The outlook for global markets remains highly uncertain. Persistently high global inflation remains the key issue – both demand and supply factors e.g., Chinese Covid lockdowns, are impacting, often in unpredictable ways and with lagged effects. The global shift to clean (and often intermittent) energy sources and a resultant, structural lack of investment in maintaining current levels of oil and gas supply, plus geo-political issues/Ukraine War are exacerbating the imbalances.

With the recent pull-back in domestic equity markets, and the associated de-rating in higher P/E stocks, we have witnessed a material convergence in trading multiples between “value” stocks and a number of quality “growth” names in the small cap universe. While this may still have further to play-out given earnings expectations are falling and exogenous disturbances to many companies’ operating environments seem to be occurring with greater frequency, we are actively building our target “buy” list of stocks and have begun selectively adding to positions.

Some particularly attractive opportunities are starting to emerge in areas where supply chain issues have caused a “deferment of demand fulfillment” rather than a permanent loss of sales, with a skittish market extrapolating the particular short-term negative disruption excessively into the future.

In an uncertain macro environment and with short to medium term inflation and supply chain concerns still elevated, our focus remains on identifying companies that can generate reasonable earnings growth against a challenging economic backdrop, particularly those that have at least some degree of pricing power (and/or ability to reduce costs) as well as strong balance sheets.
