Market and portfolio review

The global economy expanded in the second quarter despite weakness in manufacturing. The regional banking mini crisis in the U.S. flared up again early in the second quarter with the failure of another bank but then calmed. The U.S. and European economies have shown surprising resilience, helped by strong labor markets. China's economic recovery continued during the period, although it was uneven and did lose some momentum. The reopening has largely benefited the services component of the economy, while slowing growth momentum globally has meant weaker-than-hoped manufacturing activity. Inflation generally eased in developed economies, largely driven by moderation in the goods component of inflation. However, core inflation remained more stubborn. This caused developed central banks to continue tightening. The Bank of Canada resumed its tightening after a pause that started in January; the Reserve Bank of Australia also resumed rate hikes after a brief pause. Despite hotter inflation in Japan, the Bank of Japan maintained its accommodative monetary policy. The People's Bank of China (PBoC) moved to become even more accommodative late in the second quarter.

Future investment strategy

Looking ahead, we expect a relatively brief and shallow economic slowdown as inflation continues to moderate and monetary policy tightening comes to an end soon. We continue to believe the U.S. is likely to avoid a substantial broad-based recession. Instead, we expect some weakness in the second half of this year as policymakers accomplish a bumpy landing, but we anticipate activity will nevertheless remain relatively resilient.

In the U.S., we believe rate hikes are ending and inflation will continue to fall significantly, albeit imperfectly. As we enter 2024, we expect a more positive growth outlook to unfold as the U.S. economy recovers.

In our view, the eurozone and U.K. are likely to follow a pattern similar to the U.S. but with a lag. A variety of forces have helped sustain European economic momentum so far in 2023, but we expect tightening financial conditions to weigh on credit growth over time, helping to reduce inflationary pressures but also causing a significant economic slowdown. In contrast with many major developed market economies, China is in a markedly different place in its cycle — a "bumpy take-off" of sorts. Nevertheless, China remains a bright spot with subdued inflation and a robust growth outlook. We expect continued accommodation from the PBoC and some fiscal stimulus. Asia emerging markets in general are likely to benefit from this environment.
