MARKET REVIEW

In Australian dollar terms, global equities gained ground in December amid signs that the omicron variant of the coronavirus could potentially cause milder illness, approval of new coronavirus treatments, and steady reactions from central banks.

U.S. stocks rose despite a volatile month dominated by worries about rising interest rates and the new omicron variant. While initial data suggested the variant could be milder than previous forms of the virus, investors were concerned about other countries' restrictions that could weigh on global economic growth. Mid-month, the Federal Reserve announced its plan to accelerate the tapering of its monthly asset purchases starting in January—a possible prelude to increases in short-term interest rates, which could commence at some point in 2022. While inflation concerns continued to periodically weigh on stocks, economic data were still broadly positive and appeared to contribute to equity gains.

Developed European shares rebounded in December due to potentially encouraging news about the omicron variant and the European Central Bank's (ECB's) assurance that any exit from ultra-easy monetary policy would occur gradually. ECB President Christine Lagarde said that an interest rate increase in 2022 was very unlikely, though official data indicated inflation had accelerated to its highest level since the single currency was introduced in 1999. Meanwhile, the Bank of England unexpectedly raised its bank rate 15 basis points to 0.25% as a first step aimed at controlling inflation.

Developed Asian markets were slightly negative in AUD terms. Japan markets lost ground for Australian dollar-based investors but gained in local terms. In Japan, investors reacted positively as coronavirus case numbers remained relatively stable compared with other waves. In a policy speech to Japan's parliament, Prime Minister Fumio Kishida referenced previously announced large-scale economic measures to combat the coronavirus, stimulate consumption, and increase innovation.

Emerging markets lagged and underperformed their developed market peers. Performance in emerging Asian markets was mixed in AUD terms. Chinese shares were among the primary laggards. Continued turmoil in the country's indebted property sector drove volatility in the country's stocks, as did concerns about potentially slowing growth in 2022. Emerging European markets were widely mixed. Czech Republic shares soared, while shares in Hungary and Russia fell. In Latin America, most markets advanced, but Chile declined in double digits amid political uncertainty, inflation concerns, and rising short-term interest rates.

Sector performance in the MSCI All Country World Index ex Australia Net was almost entirely positive in AUD terms. Consumer staples, utilities, real estate, and health care were the strongest performers, while consumer discretionary and communication services were the only sectors to produce negative returns.

FUND REVIEW

The fund underperformed the MSCI All Country World Index ex Australia Net for the one-month period ended December 31, 2021. Our position in Southeast Asian mobile platform Sea was the largest relative detractor in the portfolio for the period. Recent earnings released in November showed that growth in the firm's key gaming business had slowed down significantly as life returned to the "COVID-off" mode in many of the countries where it operates. Despite good results from both the e-commerce and fintech segments, investor sentiment turned negative, and the stock price skidded throughout December. At the sector level, holdings in consumer discretionary detracted the most from relative returns, especially our positions in Rivian, Grab, and Etsy. No sectors contributed on a relative basis for the period.

OUTLOOK

We retain a gently optimistic, as opposed to defensive, perspective via a focus on stocks that we believe should compound earnings over the next 2-3 years and as we work through the impact of COVID-19, including a winter that has evolved in a way that is more negative than we anticipated. The questions of inflation versus deflation, value versus growth, and COVID-on versus COVID-off are clearly all very important, but it is rare for the market's macro focus and thematic pursuit to be so large or rotational as we have seen in 2021. The positive and clear aspect of the market backdrop has been the continuation of strong corporate earnings, which in turn has supported valuations and the case for equities. This continues to make global equities and thoughtful stock picking a relevant approach for return generation, even more so on the stock picking front as we normalize some of the extremes of 2021.

Our core outlook remains that we will increasingly live with and adapt to COVID-19 and that a growing economy, solid corporate earnings, and rising consumption is a good environment for equities, particularly where stocks have yet to recover from an earnings power perspective. These tenets support our ongoing confidence that applying our investment process can help us to build on our long-term track record of alpha generation, even as we move through the change and evolution that is a constant for global equity investors.

ADDITIONAL DISCLOSURES

Unless indicated otherwise the source of all data is T. Rowe Price.

Active Share is a holdings-based measure of active management representing the percentage of a portfolio's holdings that differ from those in its benchmark. Compared with tracking error, which measures the standard deviation of the difference in a manager's returns versus the index returns, Active Share allows investors to get a clearer understanding of what a manager is doing to drive performance, rather than drawing conclusions from observed returns. The greater the difference between the asset composition of a product and its benchmark, the greater the active share is.
