OnePath Diversified Fixed Interest Trust

Wholesale

30 June 2023

Market and portfolio review

Rising Sovereign bond yields weighed on bond returns over the quarter as stickier core inflation, resilient labour markets and wages pressure kept central banks on high alert. Overall the trust outperformed over the quarter. There were no manager changes over the quarter.

Global fixed income yields rose in many countries, including the US. U.S. 10-year Treasury yields approached 15-year highs above 4% after U.S. jobs data showed a still tight labor market. The unemployment rate fell lower, labor participation hasn't risen further, and wages are still growing even after the Fed's rapid rate hikes. The markets are at an inflection point in which central banks will be forced to keep monetary policy tight to limit inflationary pressures.

Future investment strategy

The US economy will likely to continue to grow below trend but avoid a recession in 2023. We believe that inflation has peaked, and after moving sideways in the first half of the year, will likely fall in the second half. However, we expect core CPI inflation to be around 3.5% at year-end, which is above the Federal Reserve's (Fed) target, meaning the Fed will likely keep monetary policy tight and not deliver any cuts this year.

The base case is currently coalesced around a soft-landing in the US, and we believe it is appropriate to look through the recent periods of historically high interest rate volatility. Yields of US investment grade companies are at levels not seen for over a decade. We are seeing investor demand even from those with a more pessimistic view on the macro outlook. In the US high yield market, the recent decline in rate volatility has been technically supportive with the new issue market opening up. Lower equity volatility has also been supportive for lower rated issuers, though we note that this has the potential to be less favorable in the scenario where issuer fundamentals weaken (from their current strong position). In emerging markets (EM), we are starting to see a pick-up in risk appetite as well. Earlier in the year, the outperforming sectors were Chinese state-owned entities and other higher rated sovereign and quasi sovereign securities, which has been reversing.

A great example of correlation to rate volatility is in the sterling investment grade market where credit spreads reached highs of 250 basis points last October on the back of the confusion caused by the mini-budget announced by then Chancellor, Kwasi Kwarteng. Spreads are now back to an index average of 170 basis points over gilts, and the range of opportunities is notable.

European financials are still very attractive versus corporates, in our view. The failure of Credit Suisse created a buying opportunity, and we see the potential for further convergence. Corporate hybrids also offer a way to get exposure to bonds with higher yields but issued by stronger companies, where we think the spread pick-up more than compensates for potential extension risk. More broadly, in European investment grade, we also note the current spread pick-up in BBBs over single A credits – 50 basis points in euros and 70 basis points in sterling.<sup>7</sup> The recent compression between BB and BBBs is also making BBBs look relatively more attractive.
