Monthly review

What happened in the market?

Australia's largest city remained in lockdown for the month of July, struggling to quell the outbreak of the highly infectious delta variant of Covid. The lockdown was extended for at least another month until the end of August with authorities turning to mass vaccinations in the hope of relieving the city from lockdown. This is expected to take at least another two to three months and, along with snap lockdowns in other states, contributed to expectations that economic activity will contract in the current quarter. Sydney's struggle with the delta strain echoed those from a number of countries around the world which contributed to a further decline in yields through the month, particularly in 10-year yields.

The rise of the delta variant in the local community overshadowed some positive data that included the unemployment rate dropping to 4.9% with participation remaining near the record high, job advertisements dropped off but remained positive and CPI for 2Q21 was 0.8% quarter-over-quarter (QoQ), bringing the year-over-year (YoY) figure to 3.8% on base effects, which most observers viewed as transitory.

Corporate issuance was moderate with deals of various maturities from CNH Industrial Capital, Dexus Wholesale Property Fund and Edith Cowan University, each in modest size. Spreads were marginally wider for corporate and supranational, sovereign and agency (SSA) sectors and were marginally tighter for semi-government bonds, while covered bonds repriced tighter. Asset-backed deals were headlined by the A$3.5 billion PUMA deal from Macquarie which the largest nongovernment deal this year. Other deals included Bluestone Prime, Columbus Triton and Metro Finance. The Australian dollar was weaker in July as the Covid delta strain caused disruption to the economic recovery and the iron ore price dipped on lower projected Chinese demand. The currency lost 2%-3% versus most of the major currencies and its trade-weighted index depreciated 1.8%.

What happened in the Fund?

The Legg Mason Western Asset Conservative Income Fund fell -0.03% during July. Over the last 12 months, the Fund has returned 0.71%, outperforming the benchmark by 0.66%. The corporate and asset backed allocations contributed positively during July, however, it was offset by interest rate strategies as yields fell.

What is the outlook?

As widely expected the RBA did not roll its YCC target bond to the November 2024 maturity in its July board meeting and provided guidance on the taper of its BPP. The pressure on a number of other central banks to commence similar gentle rollbacks of emergency policy made it easier, currency-wise, for the RBA to do so. Notwithstanding expectations of taper, we expect both domestic and global central bankers to remain committed to extremely easy policy until policy objectives are met. We believe such conditions will continue to favour spread sectors, particularly corporate bonds, which have benefited from substantial support. In our opinion, these sectors should be the best performing fixed-income assets. The Term Funding Facility for Australia's banks closed in June. The facility has provided extraordinarily cheap three-year funding and has significantly reduced the banks' need to tap the primary market for senior debt in the past year. This has contributed to the technical dynamic that has seen spreads on senior bank paper tighten to extremely low levels. Some of the major banks have signalled they may issue in the second half of this year if market conditions are favourable. Tightness in this part of the market lends itself to seeking value in other parts of the corporate and asset-backed sectors. We have selectively increased our overall exposure to credit to take advantage of steeper credit curves. This remains judicious, with the majority of the overweight still focussed on shorter maturities to manage spread risk.

Highlights

- Invests in a portfolio of Australian short duration credit, cash and cash-like securities
- Seeks to protect capital and deliver returns in excess of the cash rate
- Designed to capture relative value opportunities in duration management as well to identify securities with attractive yield characteristics
