Macquarie Professional Series

Monthly report – 30 November 2022

Performance summary

- The Fund returned 10.80%, net of fees, in November 2022, compared with a return for the Benchmark of 9.64%, as investors flocked to Chinese and Hong Kong equities on news of government support for the debt-laden real estate sector and a very slight relaxation of draconian lockdown regulations.
- All emerging market sectors advanced in November, led by strong bounces in Consumer Discretionary, IT, Communication Services and Real Estate. For the Fund, the largest relative contributors included holdings in Financials, including AIA Group and Ping An Insurance, and an underweight to the sector, and holdings in Utilities, led by Guangdong Investment and ENN Energy. Relative detractors included holdings in Consumer Discretionary, which lagged the rise of the broader sector. During the month, Walter Scott completed the final sale of Ace Hardware, with the company not articulating a clear and credible strategy to combat the risks of intensifying online competition and significant price discounts offered by competitors, which has resulted in sales remaining meaningfully below pre-Covid levels.
- China's rising tide helped lift the broader emerging market boat in November. There were welcome signs of a nascent recovery at both Tencent Holdings and Alibaba Group, two companies that have been at the epicentre of the storm buffeting Chinese equities over the past couple of years. Faster-than-anticipated, Tencent has rightsized its cost base, primarily by pulling back from projects with low profitability and making savings on sales and marketing. This helped support gross margins and sparked a return to positive underlying net income growth for the first time in five quarters. Cost savings are also bearing fruit at Alibaba, although the operating backdrop for the e-commerce giant remains a difficult one. Lockdowns have been highly detrimental for the company at a time of already weak consumer sentiment. Hopes that China's annual Single's Day shopping jamboree would help to lift the gloom were dashed when management announced that sales were flat compared to the previous year. That said, the company's third-quarter results showed incremental signs of improvement and belt-tightening is helping to support the bottom line across most business divisions. As with Tencent, a more stable regulatory environment will be an unalloyed positive for Alibaba going forward.
- With the operating environment likely to remain challenging for the foreseeable future, business models will continue to be subject to a variety of stresses and strains. It will be important to distinguish between those that are the inevitable result of near-term headwinds and those that could structurally impair a company's long-term investment rationale. As buoyant as equity markets have been in recent weeks, vigilance remains vital.
