Fund commentary

The Russell Investments High Growth Fund narrowly underperformed the benchmark in the September quarter.

Within the Fund's domestic equity portfolio, the Russell Investments Australian Opportunities Fund recorded both negative absolute and benchmark-relative returns for the quarter; the Fund impacted in part by poor stock selection within the materials space. This included an underweight to Pilbara Minerals, which almost doubled in price on the back of rising lithium prices. In contrast, the Russell Investments Australian Shares Core Fund delivered strong absolute and excess returns over the period, while the Russell Investments Australian Factor Exposure Fund narrowly outperformed its benchmark. In terms of global equities, both the Russell Investments Tax Effective Global Shares Fund (TEGS) and the Russell Investments Multi-Asset Factor Exposure Fund (MAFEF) outperformed their respective benchmarks; though the two funds did record negative absolute returns for the quarter. TEGS benefited from strong stock selection in emerging markets and Asia Pacific ex Japan, while MAFEF's outperformance was driven largely by its momentum factor exposure and regional positioning, including an underweight to emerging markets. More broadly, the Fund's exposures to global and domestic listed property weighed on overall performance. Property stocks were impacted by rising interest rates, recession fears and a further spike in long-term government bond yields. Meanwhile, a weaker Australian dollar boosted the returns of the Fund's assets denominated in foreign currency.
