Fund commentary

The Russell Investments International Shares Fund outperformed the benchmark in November.

Much of the Fund's outperformance was driven by strong stock selection in the US, including underweights to poor-performing growth names such as Apple, electric car maker Tesla and e-commerce giant Amazon.com. All three stocks posted sharp declines for the month. The Fund also benefited from stock selection in Continental Europe; notably overweights to the Netherlands' ING Groep NV and German car maker Mercedes-Benz Group AG. Stock selection in Japan added further value in November, including overweights to strong-performing names like Sumitomo Mitsui Financial Group and Resona Holdings. Other notable positions to add value were overweights to US ratings agency Moody's Corp. and Germany's Daimler Truck Holding AG. In contrast, stock selection in Asia Pacific ex Japan detracted from overall performance, including an underweight to Hong Kong's AIA Group, which jumped almost 30% for the month. Stock selection in emerging markets also weighed on returns, albeit modestly. This included short positions in Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Co. and China's Tencent Holdings. Other key positions to impact performance were underweights to NVIDIA Corp. (US) and the Netherlands' ASML Holding NV. Meanwhile, the Fund's active positioning strategy was flat in November. The strategy is currently positioned in favour of value and quality to complement our strategic factor positioning.
