Monthly review

What happened in the market?

Global financial markets finished March dominated by the Russia/Ukraine conflict, volatile and illiquid Russian equity and debt markets, and with additional volatility from on-again/off-again peace talks. Early in the month Russian local sovereign bonds were marked down to zero on essentially zero trading volume. In the US, Federal Reserve (Fed) Chair Jerome Powell's hawkish post Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting press conference highlighted that the forecast for policy rates was revised substantially higher, with many officials now seeing policy rates in restrictive territory in both 2023 and 2024. The US yield curve responded by flattening excessively, even becoming inverted between the 5- and 30-year parts of the curve, reflecting the challenge that high energy prices and an extended humanitarian conflict in Europe may pose to global growth. Our view is that growth will moderate due to the fading of the extraordinary factors that boosted activity last year. Even prior to the conflict in Ukraine, the economic data had started to shift, with recent signs suggesting that demand is slowing and the peak of labour market tightness may be behind us.

What happened in the Fund?

The Fund was down 10.38% in March and down 18.80% for the March quarter. Within the Fund duration and yield-curve positioning was the most significant detractor on a net basis mainly due to long US duration exposure. Emerging markets (EM) debt was also a significant detractor mainly as a result of exposure to Russian rates. Overall foreign exchange (FX) positioning was a positive contributor to returns. Within EM FX, Russian ruble and Brazilian real exposures contributed the most. Within developed market (DM) FX, the Japanese yen detracted the most but its negative effect was partially offset by long Australian dollar exposure. High yield exposures, mainly energy, contributed positively to performance. Investment-grade credit, mainly CDX, energy and financial exposures, also added modestly to returns.

From a Fund positioning perspective headline duration increased by a little more than three years in March with the increase split between the 2-year key rate duration (KRD), after the mid-month repricing toward a more aggressive Fed hiking cycle, and at the long end in the 10- to 30-year KRDs to provide ballast as the war in Europe continues. Additionally, the paying on swaps position was decreased by approximately 1.5 years as 10- and 30-year invoice spreads widened mid-month. There was no change to inflation trades. We trimmed the German-US short from -4.25 years at the end of February to almost flat by month-end as 10-year rates rose significantly in Europe. In FX, the long Mexican peso and Brazilian real positions were materially reduced. In East Asian currencies, long positions in the Korean won and Malaysian ringgit were reduced, as was a short Chinese yuan position.

What is the outlook?

The investment landscape faces enormous uncertainty following the Russian invasion of Ukraine. The long slog to a post-Covid world has been meaningfully delayed. Energy and soft commodity prices are likely to remain high. The case for DM government bond yields is less clear given current elevated inflation readings, but the traditional desire for such a global safe haven is likely to be powerful. Our view remains that the global economic recovery from the Covid pandemic will be underpinned by responsible central bank policy that recognizes the detrimental effect that elevated energy prices and the uncertain situation in Eastern Europe will have on global growth. We continue to believe fundamentals remain strong for corporate bonds. The repricing of credit risk and that of less directly exposed EM bonds and currencies may present opportunities. Within corporate bonds we maintain a bias to banks and select reopening industries where valuations have yet to fully recover.
