Market and portfolio review

Global equity markets were generally higher in the March quarter with the reflationary trade in full swing. Yield curve steepening, inflation expectations rising, continued strength in commodities and outperformance of value over growth stocks were all dominant features, triggered by huge amounts of stimulus putting upward pressure on price expectations. Uneven progress was made on the vaccine roll-out, with the US and UK well progressed while parts of South America and Europe continue to see surges in cases which prompted further lockdowns.

Australian shares (S&P/ASX 300 Index +3%) underperformed global markets in Q1, with the MSCI World Index +4.5%, the US S&P 500 Index +5.8% and the European Euro Stoxx 600 +7.6%, all in local currency price terms. Regions most severely impacted by Covid-19 were those that rebounded the most. Asian markets underperformed, with notable weakness from China, the Shanghai Composite falling 0.9%. A weaker currency and underperformance in the more expensive consumer and tech sectors were the primary drivers.

On a sector level in Australia, banks led the cyclical charge in Q1 (+14.7%), with consumer discretionary (+7.5%) and energy stocks (+2.4%) also outperforming. Growth stocks trading on high valuation multiples generally underperformed, with Tech (-10.6%) the worst sector and Healthcare (-2.7%) and Utilities (-2.6%) also weaker.

Commodities were generally stronger over the quarter, driven by oil prices with Brent up 23%, despite a pull-back in March. Iron ore fell 6.7% over the month, reversing gains made earlier in the year on concern that environmental policies will reduce Chinese steel production and rising supply. Copper prices gained 13.4%, while gold continued to weaken on higher yields and stronger demand for USD.

Future investment strategy

The strength of the economic recovery and its flow-on effect on bond yields are likely to continue to dominate the investment debate for the next several months. On the economic front data continues to come in ahead of expectations and this has positive implications for corporate earnings. With the vaccine rollout well underway in many countries and few signs of fiscal stimulus being meaningfully reined in, the economic outlook in much of the world remains positive. Australia's own vaccination program has been progressing more slowly. While disappointing for those looking forward to an overseas holiday, the success we've had in keeping the virus at bay should significantly limit any economic fallout from this delay.

Bond yields still appear too low in this context but may, having increased significantly over a short period of time, consolidate around current levels until more data on the progress of inflation and the durability of the economic outlook becomes available. While earnings growth remains solid and there are multiple sources of further upside including lower bad debt charges for the Banks, commodity prices staying high for Resource companies and the ongoing general reopening of the economy, this now appears largely reflected in share prices, with the Australian equity market now having more than recovered all of its Covid-induced decline.

Further upside in the short term is thus likely to require a sustained fall in bond yields driven by reduced inflation concerns, or even stronger earnings growth. While neither is an impossible outcome, they are also not things we would be willing to rely on.
