OnePath Managed Growth Trust

Wholesale

31 December 2022

Market and portfolio review

Despite a pull-back in markets during December, the final quarter of 2022 was a positive one for equities as early signs of peaking inflation led to expectations that the pace of rate hikes may have also peaked. The surge in bond yields throughout 2022 also stabilised, providing support to equity markets. Australia's S&P/ASX 300 index (including dividends) gained 9.1% over the quarter, outperforming global developed markets (MSCI World +3.2%) including the US (S&P 500 +1%). Europe (Stoxx 600 +13%) had a strong finish, rebounding as the risk of a potential energy crisis heading into Winter was mitigated by a warm winter and reasonable gas storage levels.

Although 2022 proved a very tough year in emerging markets, as China's prolonged Covid lockdowns combined with weakness in the property sector weighed on Chinese and Hong Kong listed stocks, there was a glimmer of hope towards the end of the year as government officials announced some easing measures. The China re-opening looks set to be one of the more dominant themes in 2023, with the market already in 'look-through' mode as iron ore rose sharply in Q4 2022. This is of course in contrast to the rest of the world where the effect of multiple rate hikes and inverted yields curves could signal forthcoming recessions.

Future investment strategy

A new year often comes with promises of new opportunities, and 2023 is likely to be no different. At this early stage though, the key topics of debate have not changed from where we ended 2022.

There are encouraging signs that global inflation is moderating, and some of the components could be even close to normalising. Other inputs to inflation however – including the important wage component – remain robust, which means it is too early for central banks to declare victory. Nonetheless, further rate increases are likely to be less of a focus this year than the impact on economic growth and corporate earnings of the hikes that have already been made. Globally, earnings revisions have been firmly negative for some months and, even though expectations are now lower, they continue to look too optimistic in our view. There will be important implications for Australian corporate earnings should China be successful in bringing forward its economic recovery. The Resources sector, together with a still-resilient Bank sector, would provide a solid buffer to a probable global earnings draught. So while global equity markets, Australia's included, continue to face some meaningful challenges, especially from an earnings perspective, Australia's own prospects look a bit better, at least from a relative perspective.
