Fund Summary

OnePath Global Emerging Markets Share Trust Wholesale

31 December 2022

Market and portfolio review

Global emerging equity markets faced volatility during the quarter with a sharp rally from mid November on the back of some policy changes, particularly to their existing 'zero Covid' restrictions. The Fund underperformed the benchmark over the quarter by 1.9% with William Blair, Intrinsic and TT Intl all detracting from performance. Neuberger performed slightly above benchmark.

Market volatility continued in the fourth quarter of 2022 as investors weighed the impact of inflation and the risk of recession in the world's major economies against hopes that the efforts by central banks to control inflation may be starting to succeed. This provides a stark reminder to investors that events impacting the global economy and financial markets are becoming increasingly difficult to predict. The result will and has been increased volatility and diverging company performance. At such times, the merits of business models that can outperform against difficult backdrops are often underappreciated. Given the volatility within global emerging equity markets the benchmark returned negative 14.33% for the past year. This was predominantly driven by underperforming China (regulations), as well as the Russian invasion of the Ukraine in February 2022. The Fund underperformed for the year. This was led by Intrinsic (smaller cap orientation), William Blair (less cyclical exposure) and TT international (China exposure).

Future investment strategy

The exposure to high quality companies with sustainable growth in emerging markets should bode well for the medium to longer term. It is anticipated these stocks will continue to perform during both a highly volatile period driven by COVID related issues, as well through to the longer term.
