Fund Summary

OnePath Global Emerging Markets Share Trust Wholesale

30 June 2023

Market and portfolio review

Global emerging markets rose strongly over the quarter, outperforming the MSCI AC World index. A rebound in risk appetite towards Chinese equities was a key driver, despite weaker economic data releases.

India underperformed as persistent food price rises kept headline inflation elevated. Taiwan was behind the index as continued strength in AI theme stocks was offset by weakness elsewhere.

Future investment strategy

It's fair to say the reopening of China has disappointed. Years of lockdowns combined with a weak property market (which accounts for about 80% of Chinese savers' wealth) have sapped consumer confidence. While Chinese consumer confidence is weak, investor sentiment might even be more so, and the market is clearly waiting for more tangible policies rather than words of Politburo support.

This uncertain outlook creates opportunities for medium term investors. China is priced for a lot to go wrong, and not much to go right. The upcoming first half 2023 reporting season will be key – expectations are already low, but we will be watching management outlook statements as well as any increase in cash returns to shareholders. Contrasting this negativity is India today, where the positive fundamentals of growth and reform are well known and – by our reckoning – rather at risk of not meeting lofty expectations. We continue to be patient holders of select Chinese equities as we wait for the recovery to progress.

Despite the negatives from China, there are many positives across emerging markets today. Emerging economies have generally been ahead of the curve in fighting inflation, without the need for additional fiscal spending. That leaves many emerging market governments and central banks well placed to stimulate for growth, should there be any economic slowdown. At the same time, many emerging market equity markets are still trading below long-run average valuations. In aggregate, this combination presents us, as active investors, with a myriad of longer term investment opportunities.
